To Whom it may concern;

I'm a consumer who appreciates the low prices offered at Wal-Mart . On the other hand, I'm appauled that the health problems of there employees, and families, doesn't even matter to them. Why should the Wal-Mart empire have another people control option. Wal-Marts are built primarily where there isn't many other competitors. That makes it at very controlling company. People need places to work, so they work without the benifits most large companies offer for health and wages . We now want to give them the powers to even more control. People's money, homes loans, and life. This is what would happen if Wal-Mart is to be allowed to open banks. People would end up suffering in the long run, as well as the community at large. It's a type of monopoly. They already make billions at the expense of the poorer citizens.

Sincerely,

Cat Jaeger
